Professional Industrial Workbenches

Material Flow to Effective Workplace Solutions

In the assembly industry, workstations are well planned and designed since they must function as well as possible. Multiline is expressly designed as an accessory for ACTIWORK workspace solutions.

Its underlying concept is simple: by connecting workstations to a transfer line you can achieve a more flexible and controllable material flow between workstations without sacrificing characteristics such as usability or ergonomics.

Low Investment Costs

The Multiline transfer system has two characteristics, due to which its investment costs remain low. Firstly it is integrated with an existing system, complementing current process and thereby avoiding the need for additional investments.

Secondly, it is built using standard parts and design, which make sit easy to adapt to any situation and space. It can also be easily and quickly modified when the layout changes.

Advanced Assembly Solutions

Multiline System

Optimised for WIP

The core of WIP logic (work in progress) comprises allocating a valuable to stored items between production phases. Money is wasted when half ready products or components lie unused e.g. in a trolley used as a buffer. If Multiline is used, only a small quantity of half-finished products lies waiting between production phases.

This problem is amplified if a mistake made in one phase remains unnoticed until a trolley full of defective components is brought to the next phase. With Multiline both the cost per mistake and the number of mistakes are significantly minimised, because only a few faulty products can be produced before the mistake is noticed.
